

I subscribe to satellite radio and I understand that the FCC is considering not allowing traffic and weather information to be broadcast over satellite radio. Both traffic reports and weather reports are necessary for safety purposes. Why would the FCC limit access to information that is necessary for safety? The public has a right to this information and should be able to choose the media used to obtain it. On satellite radio the weather and traffic information is available on demand, not just broadcast at random or scattered intervals. Please allow the current level of access and adopt rules that expand the free access to public safety information such as weather and traffic reports.
